Writing Local History
Problems and Prospects

The pursuit of local history has engaged more amateurs than the trained historians. It is less documented than other types, with fewer books and artifacts than that of a nation or a region. Many local histories are recorded as oral stories and so are more vulnerable than well-documented issues. Many a time local history writing tends to show the past of the local community as a smaller edition of that of the region or country. But a locality's past can also be viewed in its own terms. The Debra Thana Itihas Committee of Debra Thana Sahitya Prasar Samity has approached us with a request to organize a seminar on the present theme in collaboration with them. We have gladly accepted their proposal. It is a matter of great honour that Professor Ranjan Chakrabarti, Hon'ble Vice Chancellor of Vidyasagar University has consented to grace the seminar as Chief Guest and Chief Speaker. We also consider it a privilege to have with us Professor Ujjayan Bhattacharya of the Department of History of Vidyasagar University as Eminent Speaker. It will surely be an enriching experience.
